

I will explain how geometry, topology and model theory can be used to prove rigidity results for simple real algebraic groups such as  $SL(n, \mathbb{R})$ . Rigidity means that the 'coarse' metric structure of such a group (as for example a discrete subset with certain properties) already determines the ambient Lie group. This is joint work with Katrin Tent