

Nuclear astrophysics with fast radioactive beams

Hendrik Schatz
National Superconducting Cyclotron Laboratory
Michigan State University

Fast radioactive beams produced by projectile fragmentation offer unique experimental opportunities for nuclear astrophysics. I will discuss some recent experimental results from the National Superconducting Cyclotron Laboratory and their astrophysical implications for explosive nucleosynthesis processes.